Nichols Family

John Nichols (1745-1826), English master printer, editor, author, and antiquarian, inherited his printing business from his partner William Bowyer. Nichols printed for learned societies and published many county histories, including his own History and Antiquities of the Town and County of Leicester (1795-1812). Nichols purchased a share in the popular Gentleman's Magazine in 1778; he and his descendants edited and printed the monthly until 1856. He also produced collections of literary anecdotes of eighteenth century authors, a biography of Hogarth, and literary editions. In 1810 he became a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in London.

John Bowyer Nichols (1779-1863), the son of John Nichols by his second wife, succeeded his father as owner of Nichols & Co. and as editor of the Gentleman's Magazine. He too was a noted antiquarian, publishing a number of county histories and printing many antiquarian articles in his magazine. His extensive involvement in the Parliamentary printing business resulted in his testifying twice before Parliamentary commissions investigating the high cost of official printing. Nichols was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries and an original member of the Novomagians, their select dining club. His many antiquarian works included Historical Notices of Fonthill Abbey, Wiltshire (1836).

John Gough Nichols (1806-1873), the eldest son of John Bowyer Nichols, began attending meetings of the Society of Antiquaries with his father when he was twelve years old. Nichols grew up to become a prominent antiquarian, helping to found the Camden Society (1838), the Archaeological Institute (1844), and the London and Middlesex Archaeological Society (1855). Among his publications are Autographs of Royal, Noble, Learned and Remarkable Personages (1829) and Examples of Decorative Tiles, Sometimes termed Encaustic (1841-5). While he was best known as an antiquary and scholar, he continued to run the family printing business until his death in 1873, and he edited the Gentleman's Magazine until its sale in 1856.

Scope and Contents

The Nichols Family Correspondence consists almost entirely of letters received by John Nichols, John Bowyer Nichols, and John Gough Nichols. The collection primarily documents the editing and publication of the Gentleman's Magazine by three generations of the Nichols family, as well as other aspects of their publishing business, Nichols & Co. There is also much correspondence concerning the Nichols's antiquarian interests and promotion of learned societies, as well as some family correspondence from various relatives and among the printers themselves.

Arrangement

Organized into one series: I. Correspondence, 1769-1873.

Collection Contents

Series I: Correspondence, 1769-1873

6.67 linear feet (19 boxes)

Correspondence consists primarily of business letters received by John Nichols, John Bowyer Nichols, and John Gough Nichols. Many of the letters are from authors whose work appeared in the popular and influential Gentleman's Magazine. Subjects include articles submitted for the magazine; letters to the editor and corrections of previous articles; business arrangements; and subscription and advertising negotiations.

Many correspondents also discuss antiquarian and historical topics, including archaeological finds and numismatics, often in the context of proposing articles for Gentleman's Magazine or longer works for publication by Nichols & Co. Major correspondents include John Yonge Akerman, Thomas Blore, William Bray, Sir Egerton Brydges, Sir Henry Ellis, Maria Cantwell, Sir Richard Colt Hoare, Joseph Palmer, and Sir Charles George Young. There is also a small amount of personal and family correspondence among the printers themselves and with other members of the Nichols family.

Detailed folder notes in the box and folder list highlight the main topics of many correspondents' letters. A few correspondent files contain corrected proof, research notes, or drafts of articles. Box 19 contains unidentified correspondence; two folders of printer's proof for articles; and research and other notes.
