Ethel Lilian Voynich (1864-1960)

Ethel Lilian Voynich was born in Cork, Ireland, in 1864, the daughter of mathematicians George Boole (1815-1964) and Mary Everest Boole (1832-1916), and raised chiefly in London, England. She was a musician and composer as well as a writer and translator, and is best known for her novel The Gadfly (1897). Set in revolutionary Italy in the 1840s, the work was widely popular in the early twentieth century and became particularly beloved in Russia and China. Its many adaptations included a stage play by George Bernard Shaw, dance, opera, and at least three Russian film versions (1928, 1955, and 1980). Ethel Lillian Voynich married Polish émigré Wilfred Michael Voynich in 1902. The couple relocated to the United States during the first World War, and following her husband's death in 1930 Voynich carried on his business dealing in rare books and manuscripts. She died in New York City in 1960.
