Biographical / Historical

Allan Rohan Crite was an artist, writer, and librarian. He was born in Plainfield, New Jersey on March 20, 1910. Crite attended the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and graduated in 1936. Crite worked with the Works Progress Administration followed by a position as a draughtsman at the Boston Naval Yard from 1940 to 1974. Working in a variety of media including watercolors, drawings, lithographs, and oil paintings, Crite often depicted scenes of everyday African American life. Throughout the Depression and into the 1940s, Crite painted a series of neighborhood paintings focused on his Roxbury neighborhood. Crite also focused on religious themes in his art including illustrating church service programs for parishes and painting murals on churches.
