CALL NUMBER: LWL MSS 38

CREATOR: Lewis, W. S. (Wilmarth Sheldon), 1895-1979 , collector

TITLE: W. S. Lewis Collection of George Townshend Correspondence

DATES: 1708–1800

BULK DATES: 1766–1772

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: 2.21 linear feet (4 boxes)

LANGUAGE: English

SUMMARY: The W. S. Lewis Collection of George Townshend Correspondence holds approximately 350 letters sent to and by George Townshend (1724-1807) primarily during his tenure as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the years 1767 through 1772. The bulk of the collection is held in Series I, where most of the letters concern military and political topics, with some more personal and family correspondence. Many of the writers were appealing to Townshend for patronage appointments in regiments, bishoprics, and deaneries, for positions on local boards, and for peerage titles and honors. Very often they were soliciting on behalf of their sons, brothers, nephews, or protégés, as well as for family members of friends. The letters also discuss pensions and pensioners, and they usually express fawning gratitude for the many unspecified kindnesses that Lord Townshend had previously bestowed upon the writers. Series II holds twelve letters received by other members of the Townshend family, including Charles Townshend (1674-1738).

Administrative Information

Immediate Source of Acquisition

Bequest of Wilmarth Sheldon Lewis (Yale 1918), 1979.

Custodial History

The material in the collection primarily came from two acquisitions made by Wilmarth Lewis: one in September 1933 from the dealer G. H. Last of Bromley, Kent, and another in June 1964 from Maggs Bros. The more than 250 letters and documents in the former group comprises the bulk of the collection. James Cuninghame Durham (-1954) wrote Lewis (in LWL MSS 20) that the letters had been discovered at Raynham Hall in Norfolk after the death of his father-in-law John Villiers Stuart Townshend (1831–1899), 5th Marquess Townshend. The second group of 90 letters was acquired by Maggs from a Sotheby's sale on May 25-27, 1964 (lot 551), and no further provenance information is known. Readers may consult the library's collection file for LWL MSS 38 for more information regarding the contents of the two acquisitions.

In addition, a group of three letters from Commodore George Townshend (1715/16–1769) to his half-brother Thomas Townshend (1701–1780) were purchased from Maggs (Sotheby's sale, May 20, 1952 (lot 287)), and a single letter from John Burgoyne was a gift to Wilmarth Lewis from Walter Kennedy, made in memory of Thomas Oakes, on October 19th, 1972.

Prior to February 2022 material now in LWL MSS 38 had been interfiled in the Lewis Walpole Library Manuscript Miscellany (LWL MSS MISC).

Typed transcriptions were made by library staff for most of the letters in the collection. In 2022 the transcripts were photocopied on acid-free paper and the originals discarded.

George Townshend (1724–1807)

George Townshend, a British politician and amateur caricaturist, was born in London on February 28, 1724, to Charles Townshend, third Viscount Townshend (1700-1764) and his wife Etheldreda Harrison Townshend (1708-1788). He attended Eton College and St John's College, Cambridge (MA 1749). Following a brief military career, where he fought in the Battle of Culloden and served as aide-de-camp to Prince William Augustus, Duke of Cumberland, Townshend left the army with the title of lieutenant colonel. While he was serving in Europe, Townshend was put up for Parliament by his father; winning the election, he represented Norfolk from 1747 until 1764. He became a political ally of William Pitt, the Duke of Newcastle, and the Earl of Bute, and was responsible for the codifying of the Militia Act of 1757.

In 1758, during the Seven Years' War, Townshend was promoted to the rank of colonel, was given command of the 64th Regiment of the Footguards, and served in Quebec under General James Wolfe. He was promoted to major general in 1761 and served in Germany (1761) and in Portugal (1762) during the Spanish invasion. In 1763 he became Lieutenant General of the Ordnance and on August 19, 1767, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. Once there, an important assignment was to expand the size of the British army in Ireland by filling Irish regiments. Townshend remained in that office until 1772 when he returned to the Ordnance. He continued to achieve higher ranks in the military as he was appointed colonel in 1773, general in 1782, and field marshal in 1796.

George Townshend left the House of Commons in 1764 when, upon the death of his father, he became fourth Viscount Townshend; he was created Marquess Townshend of Raynham in 1786. He was twice married, in 1751 to Charlotte Compton, Baroness Ferrers (died 1770 at Leixlip Castle, County Kildare), with whom he had six children, and in 1773 to Anne Montgomery (died 1819), with whom he had seven children. Townshend died at his home, Raynham Hall, on September 14, 1807, and was buried in St Mary Churchyard in East Raynham, Norfolk.

Organized into two series: I. George Townshend Letters, 1736-1800. II. Other Townshend Family Letters, 1708-1790.

Collection Contents

Series I: George Townshend Letters, 1756–1800

2.21 linear feet (4 boxes)

The series holds the bulk of the collection. While the correspondents mainly wrote from England and Ireland about positions in those countries some letters cast a wider scope: Joseph Gorham sought positions in Tobago, Dominique, and Florida, and William Kelly wrote from New York in November 1767 to say he is sending "curious seeds and plants," in addition to barrels of apples and cranberries to Townshend in London. Sir George Colebrooke wrote for the directors of the East India Company regarding Townshend's help in recruiting officers "among the Catholics of Ireland," and Simon Fraser wrote from Chaves, Portugal, in 1771 about the political situation there. However, local concerns are predominant: William O'Brien, Earl of Inchiquin, wrote over several years to recommend men for sheriff of County Clare, where he was the governor and keeper of the rolls; Charles Coote, Earl of Bellomont, sent in his nomination to fill the job of state trumpeter; and Sir Robert Wilmot, who served as Townshend's private secretary, wrote seven letters discussing pensioners and other government business. John Perceval, Earl of Egmont, wrote lengthily and passionately about the augmentation of the Irish regiments and the political scene in Ireland; among his six letters is one written from London on September 15, 1768, which runs to eight pages and gives his views of the Irish people and his "most melancholy and almost desponding reflections upon the state of our affairs." Some of the more unusual items in the series are two letters from the Irish landscape painter Jonathan Fisher describing his search around London for engravers to reproduce his works, a small wash portrait that Turner Calvert enclosed of himself to remind Townshend that they had met and that he too is connected to a good Norfolk family, and a single letter from the English army officer, military engineer, and surveyor Hugh Debbieg who had, like Townshend, served in Quebec during the Seven Years' War.

Among the correspondents more heavily represented in the collection are James Francis Erskine, whose thirteen letters include five written in 1769 with first-hand coverage of John Wilkes' second expulsion from Parliament; Lord Lifford's thirty-five letters cover both business and personal affairs, most pointedly a heartfelt letter written after the death of Townshend's first wife Charlotte at Leixlip Castle on September 14, 1770; several of John Hely-Hutchinson's seventeen letters are written about Charlotte Townshend's decline and death. Francis Seymour Conway sent eight letters on the topics of military matters and news of his family, including his son in the Dragoons and his daughter Anne Moore, Lady Drogheda. There are letters that touch on personal or purely social themes such as those from Edward King and Thomas Thoroton on the topic of hounds and hunting, and from a few women such as Carolina Harrington writing to introduce an acquaintance who was traveling to Ireland "to abjure in form the Roman Catholick persuasion which he has for some time disapproved." Also present are letters from the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of Kilmore, Limerick, Norwich, and Waterford, and the Deans of Ferns, Killaloe, and Norwich, and three letters from members of the Walpole family: Sir Edward Walpole (1706–1784), Horatio Walpole (1723–1809), and Robert Walpole of Athlone (-1803).

The second subseries, Outgoing Letters, consists of nine letters George Townshend wrote to family and colleagues, some of whom have folders in the first subseries of Incoming Letters. The letters here are a mix of drafts and retained copies. Of interest is one written to Thomas Coke, Earl of Leicester, and challenging him to a duel; it is accompanied by an undated note in the hand of Wilmarth Lewis stating that R. W. Ketton-Cremer "is certain the duel did not take place."

The third subseries, Other Papers, consists of three documents: the Freedom of the County of the City of Waterford awarded to His Excellency George Lord Viscount Townshend, as Lord Lieutenant General and General Governor of Ireland in 1768, and two petitions on behalf of Thomas Dawson submitted by a committee of magistrates of Yarmouth to Townshend and his brother Charles.

Series I is organized into three subseries: Incoming Letters, Outgoing Letters, and Other Papers.
