A. B. Guthrie Jr. (1901-1991)

Alfred Bertram ("Bud") Guthrie Jr. was born in Bedford, Indiana, on January 13, 1901. The following June he moved with his family to Choteau, Montana, when his father became principal of the newly created Teton County High School there.

At age fourteen Guthrie began work as a printer's devil for the local newspaper, the Choteau Acantha. He graduated from high school in 1919 and entered the University of Washington to study journalism. After a semester he transferred to the University of Montana because, as he said, "I disliked the climate. Days on end of rain and cloudy skies." While at Montana, he studied under H. G. Merriam, considered the dean of Western journalists, and gained experience by contributing to the regional magazine Frontier.

Upon graduating with honors in 1923, Guthrie went with a friend to Mexico to work on an irrigation project. Soon after Guthrie went to California but failed to locate employment. He returned to Montana in 1924 and found temporary work with the Forest Service, which was conducting a decennial agricultural census. When this job ended, he left Montana to work in an uncle's flour and feed mill in Attica, New York. The mill burned down shortly after Guthrie arrived, leaving him unemployed once again.

In 1926, Guthrie found a position in journalism, working as a reporter on the Lexington Leader in Lexington, Kentucky. His new position and his rapid promotions meant that he felt able to ask his high school sweetheart, Harriet Larson, to marry him. Married in 1931, the couple had two children, Alfred Bertram Guthrie III and Helen Guthrie.

Throughout the 1930s, Guthrie's success as journalist with the Leader increased, but so did his desire to become a serious writer. In 1939 he took a leave of absence to travel to Minnesota with his mother, who was being treated for a terminal illness. While reading many Westerns and detective stories, Guthrie decided to write one himself, later noting that "I was going to write a Western and a mystery but I found out it did not come as easy as I thought it would." The result of this decision was the novel Murders at Moon Dance, published by Dutton in 1943. Although Guthrie later considered it "a trashy piece of work," it did fairly well for a first novel and was also published in England and Argentina.

In 1944 Guthrie received a Nieman Fellowship. During his term at Harvard he met Theodore Morrison, a member of the literature faculty and a former associate editor of the Atlantic Monthly. Under Morrison's tutelage, Guthrie wrote his first major novel, The Big Sky. Published in 1947 by William Sloane and Associates, it was highly praised and brought him recognition. He immediately began research for a sequel to this popular success, and in 1949 he published The Way West.

The Way West won the Pulitzer Prize in May of 1950. His increasing stature brought him many requests for articles from such magazines as Life, Liberty, Atlantic Monthly, Westways, and the Saturday Evening Post. This income, along with the prize money, allowed Guthrie to retire from journalism and return to Montana.

In 1951 Guthrie was invited to Hollywood to write the screenplay for Jack Schaefer's Shane. After the movie's success, Guthrie went on to write several more scripts, including the Hecht-Hill film The Kentuckian and an adaptation of Bent's Fort that never went to production. His last work in Hollywood was a script based on his own novel These Thousand Hills (1956).

The Big It, Guthrie's first book of short stories, was published in 1960. Guthrie published little in the early 1960s, but his popular autobiography, The Blue Hen's Chick, appeared in 1965. His marriage to Harriet Larson had ended, and Guthrie married Carol Luthin in 1967.

Guthrie now decided to continue his "epic of the West" begun with The Big Sky, producing Arfive, (1970), The Last Valley (1975), and Fair Land, Fair Land (1982). During this period, continuing his early interest in detective Westerns, he wrote a series of books featuring the Western sleuth Chick Charleston (a county sheriff in Montana) and his educated sidekick Jason Beard. The series included Wild Pitch, The Genuine Article, and Playing Catch-up, and won a number of awards, including the Silver Spur Award of the Western Writers Association and an award from the National Cowboy Hall of Fame. Guthrie's last "western entertainment," Murder in the Cotswolds (1989), featured the same characters but was set in the English countryside.

The preservation of the West he loved became a major concern of Guthrie's during his later years. He increasingly accepted public engagements and writing assignments that would allow him to speak out on Western environmental abuses, becoming a "patron saint" for a number of environmental organizations. In 1988 David Petersen edited and published a collection of Guthrie's preservationist writings: Big Sky, Fair Land: The Environmental Essays of A. B. Guthrie Jr.

A. B. Guthrie Jr. died in May 1991.

Agents Guthrie's correspondence with agents begins in the mid-1940s. Topics include the sales negotiations for essays, articles, and books; criticism of Guthrie's work; career advice; and encouragement to Guthrie after his failure to win the Pulitzer Prize for The Big Sky. Early letters often contain information on the nature of writings by Guthrie no longer extant. Guthrie's earliest agent was Maxwell Aley, but he soon moved to the firm of Brandt & Brandt, while retaining Aley for certain assignments. Information on Guthrie's lecture tours can be found in the Lee Kedick correspondence.

Publishers Publishers Correspondence contains revision suggestions and editorial advice, financial informations, royalty records, and sales statistics. Guthrie's correspondence with William Sloane Associates and Houghton Mifflin is particularly rich in editorial recommendations. While Guthrie batched much of his publisher- related correspondence, he at times separated some files related to particular works. These separated files have been arranged under the individual titles of the works in the Writings series. The "Publishers' Queries" section of this series contains invitations to Guthrie to write for various publications, and are substantially in their original order.

Series II: Writings

Writings is organized in several sections: Books, Articles, Introductions and Reviews, Speeches, and Other Writings. Guthrie's works are arranged chronologically within each section. Under each title can be found manuscripts, correspondence relating to the work, publicity material, dustjackets, and financial records. This is substantially Guthrie's own order for this material. Other relevant information, however, can often be found in the chronological files of Publishers' correspondence. For example, the William Sloane Associates files for 1947-48 contains correspondence bearing on the evaluation, marketing, distribution and sales of The Big Sky.

Descriptions such as "my typed version" are taken from notecards that Guthrie inserted at the beginnings of manuscript files.

"The Blue Hen's Chick" (1965) "The Blue Hen's Chick" is Guthrie's unpublished autobiography. Few of the manuscripts are dated, and Guthrie's original order has been preserved, even though some chapters appear to be out of numerical sequence. It seems likely that these groupings represent various stages of revision. The section titles in quotation marks are taken from notes by Guthrie. Manuscript, "Original of Blue Hen's Chick."

Motion Pictures

Beginning in 1951, Guthrie journeyed to Hollywood and, for the moment, put his novel writing on hold, to write the screenplay to Shane for George Stevens Productions. The film was released in 1953. He returned to Hollywood from time to time in attempts to write screenplays for The Way West (United Artists, 1967), The Kentuckian (Twentieth Century-Fox, 1955), and a failed attempt at penning These Thousand Hills (Twentieth Century-Fox, 1956). He would also write unproduced pilots for television. The correspondence (frequently detailed) deals with these productions as well as with explorations into various consulting assignments and motion picture projects.
