Scope and Contents

This collection provides valuable insight into the work of an early twentieth-century religious educator, Reverend Benjamin Severance Winchester. Winchester began serving in religious education and as a Congregationalist minister in 1897. He lived and worked in Washington, Illinois, Massachusetts, New York, and Connecticut. During his career, Winchester taught religious education at multiple schools and churches, including the Yale Divinity School. He worked most extensively with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the International Council of Religious Education. The collection contains valuable information on American social and religious attitudes in the 1910s, 1920s, and 1930s.

Series I, Correspondence, contains two types of letters. Personal Correspondence contains letters to and from Winchester's family, friends, and former congregants. Professional Correspondence shows the diversity of Winchester's activities and interests. Winchester corresponded with the Congregational Sunday School Publishing Society (The Pilgrim's Press), various religious organizations, and provided professional advice. Some letters also focus on Winchester's published writings.

Series II contains Writings by Winchester. These include pamphlets, speeches, book-length works, and published articles. Winchester published several books, but drafts here include "The Teaching Church" and "Curricula of Christian Education." Articles in this series focus on hymns, movies, patriotism, adult education, and the debate over religious education in public schools.

Most valuable to the Winchester collection is Series III, Subject files. Included are correspondence, meeting minutes, committee reports, and pamphlets from a wide variety of religious and social organizations. Most of the Series details religious education in various fields, including sexual education, race relations education, Prohibition education, and peace education. Of particular interest are surveys completed by young people, 12 to 18 years old. The most numerous surveys come from Northeastern and Midwestern states and focus on race relations, sexual attitudes, and Prohibition opinions. Included as well are Typical and Life Situations, which were created to teach young people proper morals in real life situations. The Series also contains curriculum for Marriage and Home-life education and Family and Parent religious education.
