Biographical / Historical

David Dudley Field (1805-1894): lawyer, law reformer; argued in the Milligan case (1867) concerning the jurisdiction of military courts as specified in the constitution; also faced controversy during the Erie Railroad litigation of 1869; most famous for his codification of the laws of New York state; also published Draft Outline of an International Code (1872), which was translated into Italian and French. Cyrus West Field (1819-1892): merchant, capitalist, promotor of the first Atlantic telegraph cable in 1866.

Scope and Contents

The materials in the collection relate to the Field family of Stockbridge, Massachusetts. There are several scattered items of correspondence (folders 13, 22, 32), a small amount of memorabilia such as cards and invitations, and thirty photographs of family members and the Field house (folders 6, 12, 14, 20, 26). However, the bulk of the the collection consists of newspaper clippings and other printed matter about family members, in particular Cyrus W. Field, David Dudley Field, Emilia Ann (Field) Brewer, Rachel Lyman Field, Stephen Dudley Field and Stephen J. Field. The papers are arranged by family members. These papers were originally part of the David Josiah Brewer Papers, Manuscript Group Number 99.
