Processing Information

This finding aid was revised in 2020 to address outdated or harmful descriptive language. During that revision, description was changed in the summary and scope and contents note for the collection. References to Japanese-American "relocation," and "relocation center" during World War II were removed and replaced with community recommended and currently accepted terminology in 2020, such as "incarcerated" and "American concentration camp." Previous versions of this finding aid may be available. Please contact Manuscripts and Archives for details. If you have questions or comments about these revisions, please contact Manuscripts and Archives or the Archival and Manuscript Description Committee. For more information on reparative archival description at Yale, see Yale's Statement on Harmful Language in Archival Description.

Biographical / Historical

Poston Relocation Center was a War Relocation Authority (WRA) American concentration camp located in Yuma County (now La Paz County) in southwestern Arizona. The camp was established in 1942, and was the largest geographically of the ten American concentration camps operated by the WRA. Poston was built on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, despite the objections of the Tribal Council. Many of the incarcerated placed at Poston were sent directly there, as opposed to being filtered through a temporary detention center first. Poston's incarcerated came largely from farming areas in Central and Southern California, with a combined peak population of 17,000 people. Incarcarees carried out most of the labor required to keep the camp running, including growing a wide variety of crops in addition to raising chickens and hogs. Japanese American workers were instrumental in making the area more livable by clearing, preparing, and irrigating the land. The camp was closed in 1945 following the end of World War II.
