Biographical / Historical

The Society of Physiological Neurology was organized in 1937 by a group of individuals who felt that the American Neurological Association was too oriented to practicing clinicians. Run by an annual committee, the Society was small and highly selective in its membership. It held meetings the day before and in the same location as the ANA from 1938 through 1942. In 1943, the war prevented organizing a meeting. The Society does not appear to have been re-established under this name after the war.

Scope and Contents

The collection appears to be the archives of the Society and contains correspondence with members and others by the successive chairmen of the annual committees, Frederick A. Gibbs, Margaret A. Kennard, Charles D. Aring, Clinton A. Woolsey, and Howard J. Curtis; membership lists; drafts of programs; and attendance records. Abstracts of presentations are included for 1942.

Arrangement

Arranged by year.
